In a lush forest, there was a serene pond where many aquatic animals lived peacefully. Among them was a cunning crane who often looked for ways to trick others for his own gain. During one particularly dry season, the water in the pond began to dry up, causing great concern among the fish, frogs, and other creatures living there.

away, where there was plenty of water. He offered to carry them to this new pond one by one in his beak. Desperate and naive, the animals agreed to the crane's plan.

However, the crane had no intention of helping them. Instead, he flew each animal to a secluded rock and devoured them. When it was finally the wise crab's turn, he suspected the crane's intentions and insisted on riding in the crane's beak while holding onto his neck with his claws.
